What is a property unit number? (formerly called dwelling number).

If the postal address you report is an address in Norway, and the address is a residential address, you must always state the property unit number for the address. All residential addresses in Norway have a property unit number (formerly called dwelling number), and all apartments should have an address label property unit number attached to the doorframe.

The address label should be visible on or by the door. The property unit number consists of one letter and four digits, and is stated on the address label that is stuck on or next to the door.

IF YOU DO NOT KNOW THE PROPERTY UNIT NUMBER FOR YOUR ADDRESS, you can read more about how to find it at <https://skatteetaten.no/unitnumber>. If you rent an apartment, you can contact the person your renting from, or you can contact the municipality where you live.
